CONTROLLING LONDON'S GROWTH

DONALD L. FOLEY

Planning the Great Wen, 1940-1960

This story of efforts in recent years to plan for Greater London is both unique and important. The London record is unmatched by metropolitan planning efforts elsewhere and has implications for cities in other countries seeking solutions to problems reflecting unanticipated growth, technological and functional change, chaos in government, and the reformulation of social requirements. In his book, which possesses notable depth without resembling an academic treatise, Mr. Foley presents the first comprehensive, factual analysis of the London planning experience and offers a sophisticated discussion of the social doctrine incorporated in its plans. He writes for the thoughtful city-dweller who wishes to control rather than to be controlled by his environment.

A Study in Development of Government for a Metropolitan Area

This thorough examination of one of the nation's most rapidly developing and most complex metropolitan areas, Los Angeles, focuses on two contradictory characteristics of the current urban scene: the dispersion of political power among a number of centers, and the presence of issues and problems whose impact transcends the jurisdiction of any one local government. The authors attempt to clarify the nature of the legal, political, social, and economic forces that have shaped the present system, to assess their impact on the structure of Los Angeles local government, and offer possible alternatives for decisions on area-wide issues.
